It is often said that you can't blame your mother if your destination in life is that of a loser. I find that that statement to be observed through the minds of those who have obscure rationale. It is an incomprehensive statement made by assumption rather than knowing the exact nature of every given situation. Therefore, these types of ambiguous thinkers derive at illogical s. What they are not saying is, depending on the type of mother you have, you can blame her for molding your psyche into a muddle of bewilderment and discombobulation. If you had a vindictive mother like mine, you could also blame her for Stigmatizing it's focus on a devastation of trauma and anticipated escape from high anxiety. Although our beginnings are the main awakening to explore possibilities of life, the basic privileges and advantages are impossible to discover, if the mind is fluttered with confusion. The destruction will enable you to lose the perspective of your purpose for living. The significance of importance of our beginnings is that they are the foundation of defining the structure and intellect of our persona. Good, bad, or indifferent, they are the base and key factor of shaping our character. Our universal selves. "Unhumbled Beginnings", is a thrilling biography that depicts the origin of trauma and what happens when it goes undetected.

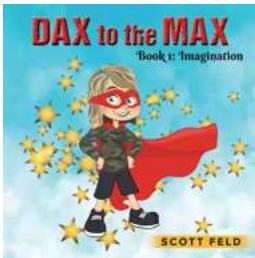

Born in Springfield, Massachusetts, in the year of 1966, my arrival into the world was one that was despised by her mother for pure existence. Already molded into misery, by a complicated movement, she lingered in the effect of being a destructively scornful, woman. In my first chapter it explains one of the main reasons Meviline evolved to being mean and evil. Being raised by her wealthy, white grandmothers gave her the instinctive feeling of being "privileged". Having to leave the country to live with her city-stricken family, devastated her psyche. Unfortunately, there is nothing more damaging than a grown woman who lives through life refusing to identify and accept her character. A scornful woman will only grow old with sinister ways of being bitter, evil, and angry. Imprisoning herself with a congested mind of hate, her only mission in life will be to spread the hate she holds. As fate would have it, I went through life suffering the consequences of my mother's scorn. While Meviline wildly lived in contempt of the life she loathed, she perpetrated the fraud of being a good mother and loyal wife. Constantly being homeless with a reckless mother, the inescapable abuse seemed inevitable. I walked through the valley of shadows of death, trying to survive Meviline. Since I knew very little about a god, I feared evil. I lived like a soul stolen and bound into slavery, and Meviline was my controller and sociopathic mentor. In Mevilines contempt of negligence and hatred, I was held captive into a misery of severe abuse. Worse than her forefathers, Meviline had no pity and used physical abuse not only for instruction and discipline but for pure hate. Meviline tortured me into the submissiveness of fear and confusion. While the punches to the back of my head would sting for weeks, she often left me branded with black and blue bruise that were visible to others. When she sprained my bones and joints, she never took me to a doctor. Concealing my pain from all that I endured set the course for bi-polar affects, on their way. While the trauma was going undetected, I was psychologically damaged, bi-polar and traumatized. Sadly, Meviline needed more help than I did. Since my father knew this, he bought a Victorian home to keep us from living a disgustingly homeless life. Despite his grace and mercy, Meviline showed no gratitude. After years of partying and being mistreated by men, she was not satisfied. This cliffhanging book leaves the reader wondering the fate of the innocent lives destroyed in the realms of undetected trauma. Today, the effects of Mevilines evilness are still lingering in the air.
