A word by the author

A man is in search of something his whole life. He searches for meaning, truth and answers; searches challenges, love and beauty. This is my contribution to the search. In my poems I wanted to describe what I found in myself and what others like me found in themselves. I believe I will give the pleasure of reading this relatively small, but to me meaningful bundle of my own thoughts, to the like-minded people. I look forward to it.

Certain readers will conclude that I am a hedonist because of some of my poems. Part of it is true, because I am just an ordinary human being, inheritor of the original sin just like everybody else, whether they like to admit it or not. I must also admit that I am an addict to aesthetics. This is where I voice it.

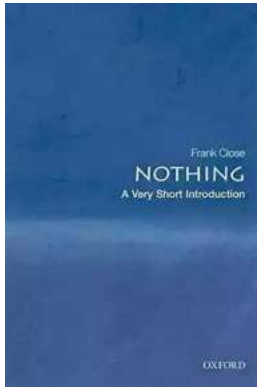

Imperfection is my tool. The limits are genes, environment, education and self-censorship. The result lays before you in a form of fifty poems and one short story.

This poetry collection is a deviation from my so far written and published poetry. I do not lecture others like I used to. I am neither a judge nor an interpreter.

Granted, I am no plowman that kills weeds. I am a merchant offering his verses in a never-ending marketplace of the written. I do not expect anything in return but for you to dedicate your time to reading this poetry collection.
