Overview of South Carolina Employment Laws

South Carolina has specific laws governing various aspects of employment, including minimum wage, discrimination, harassment, workers' compensation, and much more. These laws are in place to protect the rights of workers and ensure that employers maintain fair and safe work environments.

The Minimum Wage and Overtime Laws

In accordance with the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), South Carolina follows the federal minimum wage requirement. As of January 2022, the minimum wage in South Carolina is $7.25 per hour. However, it's important to note that certain employers may be subject to different minimum wage standards based on their industry and number of employees. Additionally, South Carolina follows the federal law regarding overtime pay, entitling employees to one and a half times their regular rate of pay for hours worked beyond 40 in a workweek.

Non-Discrimination and Equal Opportunity Laws

South Carolina prohibits workplace discrimination based on various protected characteristics, including race, color, religion, sex, disability, national origin, and age. Employers are also required to provide reasonable accommodations for employees with disabilities, ensuring that they are not discriminated against due to their condition.

South Carolina Workers' Compensation Laws

To protect employees from workplace injuries, South Carolina requires most employers to provide workers' compensation insurance coverage. This coverage helps employees recover medical expenses and lost wages if they are injured or become ill due to work-related activities.

Employment Termination and Severance Pay

South Carolina follows the "at-will" employment principle which means that employers can terminate employees at any time and for any reason that is not explicitly prohibited by law. Nonetheless, certain exceptions exist, such as termination based on discrimination or retaliation, which are strictly prohibited under federal and state laws.
