This is Book Two of Surfing Through Time, covering the period 1969-2009. It covers where I was able to “take my stands” (In the words of the Eagles), and how surfing helped create a sturdy and stable foundation for business and family life.

Is surfing special? I know we surfers think so, and the broad global culture has seemed to support us on this. As said, surfing is both participative and visually attractive. You can do it, and you can watch it as well. It has had an incredible number of spin-offs; stand-up paddle, snowboarding, skate boarding, wind surfing, kite boarding, etc. It has absolutely captured the lexicon; We surf the Internet, we “Channel surf” on TV.

As in Book One, each chapter starts with a brief lyrical quote from a song which fits the story in the chapter. Music of all kinds was always the sound track to “Surfing Through Time.” Some are happy tracks, some less so; Even the surfing life isn’t always perfect.

On the other hand, the effect of anything one does when young which is healthful and joyous ought to stand one in good stead as one ages, don’t you think?

With the above as background, I'd like to dig deeper into some of the ideas, ("precepts") that the above suggests. In each case, I'll try to show linkages; maybe present a theory of cause and effect. Because, I would say that the following are my views of the reasons it worked for me.

Precept 1) What one tries has an effect on one; sometimes the effect is deep and ineradicable. Each of our actions (as well as failures to act) have consequences. More to the point, passions have deep consequences.

Precept 2) Completeness – What's the full picture (over a lifetime)? How does (did) surfing affect one's ability to understand and deal with the whole picture?

Precept 3) Consider the endurance and impact of ideas - why and how surfing became a foundational meme Precept 4) What does and doesn't matter (surfing business vs. business business).

Precept 5) Surfing as a metaphor for the human condition (you're only on the wave for a while).

Precept 6) Truth of "Something worth leaving behind."

Precept 7) Continuity – How early experiences shapes later life.

Precept 8) "Three-legged stool" – for a stable life.

Precept 9) Life is always at the "crossroads" – who you know and who matters to you.

Precept 10) Accommodating to conditions in the world immediately around you.

Precept 11) Music as central – Words / lyrics shape things.

Should be interesting. What do you think, and how does this relate to surfing, and what I've said above? Great questions...
