Isabel and Zita Alvarez are feather tongues—ever since they can remember they've spoken the language of crows. But when their crow sentinel disappears on a mission to save the last whooping cranes, the twelve-year old twins know they've got to set out across a wilderness to aid him in his quest.

They're soon swept into a society of crows who have long been expecting them through crow legend. The league must stop a pair of physicists who plan to harvest the energy of endangered species as they go extinct. Their goal is to stop the influx of migrants fleeing into the world's last wilderness. The League of Crows can only stop them if the girls can discover the truth of their own crow natures: Zita must learn the power of her old wooden flute while Isabel must overcome a physical disability to spread her wings.
