Scent of a City weaves together present day and 1980s Tokyo. The story is about Jo, a wine expert and food writer with an eye for the spirit world--a secret she'd rather not acknowledge. She faces the near-implosion of her successful, hedonistic San Francisco life after a serious career misstep. Divorced and forced to take a hiatus from her job, she returns to Tokyo after years of buried history. In addition to her past and her long neglected familial ties to Okinawa, she needs to reconcile with her manipulative and narcissistic mother, who is opening up her own nightclub and enlists Jo's assistance on this dubious venture.

In Tokyo, Jo stirs up the restless ghost of a past love and volatile affair, as well as haunting memories of her own experiences in the seductive entertainment world of a glamorous but male-dominated society. She meets Zo-chan, an urban gardener with mysterious powers who lives an underground existence on the fringes of society because of a bizarre deformity. At the same time Jo meets Kenji, a restaurant designer of Korean descent who challenges her to open up her life to unexpected opportunities, but who wrestles with his own ghosts. These friendships become life changing for Jo and all involved: Zo-chan, Kenji, her mother Tsuru, and the brother she left in San Francisco, Jack.

Scent of a City is about the Tokyo of dreams and memories, contrasted by the "real" Tokyo. It's about Tokyo as experienced by a twenty-something hapa lost in an urban wonderland. It's about identity and alienation, social misfits and expats, mizu-shobai, the economic bubble before it burst, doomed love, technology vs. nature, siblings, obsession, floating Gen X-ers, duality and extremes, mono no aware, detachment and connectedness, finding your home and embracing diversity. There's some magical realism, a bit of romance and humor, all wrapped up in a sensory, modern-day multicultural adventure in a city that beguiles so many.
