The Gallic Wars were a series of military campaigns led by the famed Roman general Julius Caesar, occurring from 58 to 50 BCE. Caesar's objective was to subjugate the tribes inhabiting the regions of Gaul (modern-day France, Belgium, and parts of Switzerland and Germany). What started as an expedition quickly turned into a large-scale conquest as Caesar encountered fierce resistance from the Celtic tribes. Through tactical brilliance, Caesar forged alliances, exploited divisions among the Celts, and ultimately secured Roman dominance over Gaul. The Gallic Wars showcased Caesar's military genius, political astuteness, and laid the foundations for his later rise to power.
