Stepping into Greatness

It wasn't long before Joss established himself as one of the premier pitchers in Major League Baseball. In the 1908 season, he achieved an exceptional feat that would forever etch his name in the annals of sporting history. On October 2, 1908, Joss pitched a perfect game against the mighty Chicago White Sox, becoming only the second player to accomplish this remarkable feat.

A Battle Against the Odds

However, just as Joss was reaching the pinnacle of his career, fate dealt him a cruel blow. The year 1910 marked the beginning of his downfall. At the peak of his powers, Joss was diagnosed with tuberculosis, a disease that would prove to be his ultimate nemesis. Undeterred, he faced his illness with remarkable courage, never letting it diminish his passion for the game.

Joss fought valiantly, striving to regain his former glory. Sadly, his battle was cut short on April 14, 1911, as he tragically succumbed to the insidious grip of tuberculosis at the tender age of 31.
