There is no better way to see America than on foot. And there is no better way to appreciate what you are looking at than with a walking tour. Whether you are preparing for a road trip or just out to look at your own town in a new way, a downloadable walking tour from walkthetown.com is ready to explore when you are.

Each walking tour describes historical and architectural landmarks and provides pictures to help out when those pesky street addresses are missing. Every tour also includes a quick primer on identifying architectural styles seen on American streets.

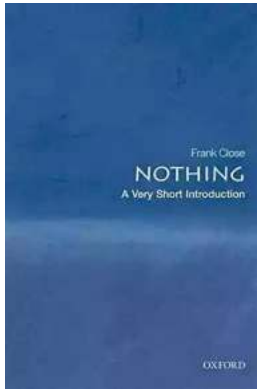

Many American towns owe their existence to the railroads. The railroad was so important to Fargo that the town was named for William G. Fargo, a director of the Northern Pacific Railroad. At first it wasn't much of a town, back in 1871 when the first city pioneers staked homestead claims at the point where the Northern Pacific planned to cross the Red River. At that time Midwestern settlers knew the place as Centralia where steamboats would stop on the river.

Fargo's drive to become North Dakota's premier city began with the formal arrival of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads. In 1890 the city was selected as the Flickertail State's federally funded land grant college, the North Dakota Agricultural College which evolved into North Dakota State University in the 1960s. Fargo became the "Gateway to the West" approaching the 20th century.

Progress was slowed on a late spring day in 1893 when fire broke out on Front Street (Main Avenue today) and was quickly carried by winds across much of the town, studded with wooden buildings. More than thirty blocks of downtown Fargo were destroyed but optimism among the 8,000 inhabitants in the heart of the Red River Valley was scarcely diminished. By the next summer the Fargo streetscape was lined with 246 new buildings, mostly constructed of brick and stone.

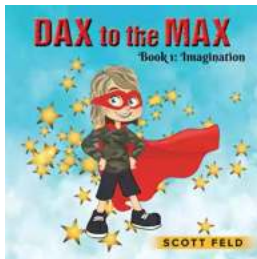

We will see many of those post-conflagration buildings that still reside in the heart of Fargo on our walking tour. And we will start with one from the progenitor of the city itself...
