Marilyn Coffey in her libidinous book Pricksongs recreates her youthful freedom from sexual taboos. Her steamy poems are as crazy, diverse, risqué, and turbulent as The Sixties when she wrote them.

Make Love, Not War advised the slogan, and she did.

Some funny, some passionate, some provocative, Coffey's poems will sweep you back to a decade when gaudily painted Flower Power buses roamed the streets when mini skirts, bell-bottoms, and love beads adorned bodies when The Pill and sexual liberation were new.

Named after her Pushcart Prize winning poem, Pricksongs is Coffey's second poetry book. She has also published a biography, Mail-Order Kid; an essay collection, Great Plains Patchwork; and Marcella, the first novel written in English that used masturbation as part of its main theme. Coffey's work has been read in Canada, England, Australia, Denmark, Japan and India.
